A Reckless Soviet A-Bomb Test, on Film

By Marlise Simons

New York Times Service PARIS — On the morning of Sept. 14, 1954, in the Ural Mountains about 970 kilometers southeast of Moscow, the Soviet military exploded an atomic bossh in the air near 45,000 Red Army troops and thousands of civilians as part of a military exercise.

part of a miniary exercise.

How many people were killed, maimed or became ill as a result of the exercise may never be known. But a film of the test recently obtained from secret Soviet military archives sheds light on the often reckless nuclear testing during the Cold War and the use of people as guines pigs, nuclear specialists say.

Among the disclosures of the film, parts of which were shown in Paris last month, are that ... The Soviet newspaper Pravda first reported the Soviets in a single test exposed their troops. to radiation levels 10 times as high as the maximum then permitted for a whole year for American troops. It also discloses that the troops were exposed to high radioactivity for an extended time, at least the whole day. The purpose of the exercise, as explained by the film's narrator, was to test whether troops could fight in an area immediately after it had been hit by an atomic bomb.

. A committee of Soviet veterans is seeking government compensation and special medica treatment for what the veterans say are years of radiation-induced illnesses, and the film provides the first public documentary proof that the test took place. Veterans were recently told by Russian generals that the explosion was an "imitation" atomic blast.

The blast took place near the village of Totskoye, 600 miles (975 kilometers) from Moscow. Matsushita Chief Rethinks The Winning Formula

By Steven Brull ional Flerald Tribune

TOKYO - Since he took over as president of Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. in February, Yoichi Morishita has been warning senior executives that the formula that made the company the world's largest consumer electronics concern is obsolete.

"What we're dealing with is not simply another cyclical downtum, but a structural prob-lem stemming from how Japanese industry de-veloped," Mr. Morishita said in an interview, his first with a Western news organization since becoming president: "We have to recognize that to progress, we must do things differently."

Since its founding in 1918, Matsushita, which sells goods under the Panasonic, Quasar, Techmics and National brand names, has grown into a $60 billion global empire with more than 250,000 employees. It has done so by being the quintessential Japanese conglomerate.

Never known as an innovator, unlike its arch-rival Sony Corp., Matsushita has competed with brute force, using unbeatable economies of scale to undercut competitors. The Osaka-based company also has exercised a fight grip at home, marketing its products through a network of more than 24,000 distrib-

But now many of Matsushita's strengths appear as weaknesses. The yen's 13 percent surge against the dollar this year has made the company's domestic manufacturing operations, which make up 82 percent of production, less competitive. Its Japanese distribution network also has been burt by the growing popularity of

Clinton Warns North Korea Against Attack on the South

Nuclear Arms 'Cannot Be Allowed' In Pyongyang's Control, He Asserts

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton laid down a firm marker for North Korea on Sunday, saying flatly that Pyongyang "cannot be allowed to develop a nuclear weapon" and declaring that a North Korean invasion of the South would be taken as an attack on the Speaking in a broadcast interview, Mr. Clinton issued no ultimatum to North Korea nor did be speak of a deadline for the North to permit international inspection of its nuclear

Mr. Clinton had previously said that if North Korea ever used nuclear weapons "it will be the end of their country." But he had never specifi-cally stated that the North would not be permitted to build a bomb.

His comments reflected an apparently deep frustration that intermittent talks involving the United States. North Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency have produced little but stalemate over the problem of nuclear proliferation, one Mr. Clinton called "a very.

very grave issue for the United States."

The Communist government in the North bas repeatedly failed to meet international demands to open its nuclear sites to inspection. It is reported to be sending troops south and has vaguely threatened armed conflict. Asked whether he would consider a preemp tive military attack on North Korea's atomic sites, which Pyongyang says are research plants, Mr. Clinton declined to answer, saying he would not discuss specific options.

"North Korea cannot be allowed to develop a nuclear bomb," Mr. Clinton said in the interview with NBC News. "We have to be very firm The president said there was "a lot of disreement" about what should be done about North Korean nuclear plants, which Washington believes may be involved in weapons pro-duction, and be told his questioner: "I just want to assure you and the American people that we are doing everything we possibly can to make the best decisions, to be firm in this." In the bourlong interview, Mr. Clinton also made these other points:

· He would not rule out a U.S. invasion of Haiti but gave no indication that this was under active consideration to restore President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power. Mr. Clinton said that be hoped other nations would agree to freeze the financial assets of Haitians supporting the military regime there and that an economic quarantine was also being considered.

• He said that U.S. troops in Somalia would resume street patrols in Mogadishu in support of the UN humanitarian mission there and would not "hunker down and stay behind walls." Mr. Clinton said he disagreed with assertions of the UN secretary-general. Butros Burros Ghali, that unless gangs there are disarmed. Somalia will revert to chaos. In Mogadishu on Sunday, the faction leader Mohammed Farrah Aidid threatened the Unit-ed States with a "bloody confrontation" if troops were not confined to barracks. (Page 4)

Mr. Clinton played down the significance of President Boris N. Yeltsin's apparent decision to delay a presidential vote in Russia. He said Mr. Yeltsin would continue to receive U.S. support as long as he promoted democracy and buman rights.

· He defended his secretaries of state and defense as having been subjected to "unfair" political attacks and said his foreign policy team would stay on the job "as long as we're all working together.

 He expressed chagnin over news coverage of his first rune months in office, saying that he was successfully pursuing an aggressive agenda for change but had failed to make the public fully aware of his accomplishments.

The question of relations with North Korea drew the most somber comments from him, 'I tried to issue the sternest, clearest possible statement about this when I was in Korea." Mr. Clinton said of his trip to South Korea in July. sothing has changed since then.

Asked if an invasion of South Korea would be taken as an attack on the United States, Mr. Clinton replied: "Absolutely, We bave our soldiers there." Some 35.000 U.S. troops are stationed in South Kores.

They know that any attack on South Korea is an attack no the United States," be said. The South Korean president. Kim Young Sam, suggested recently that it may be time to set a deadline for North Korean compliance to nuclear inspection. Although he would not rule out sending a U.S. military force to Haiti, Mr. Clinion seemed to discount that option.

He said one of the two options under consideration to undermine the military regime that took power in 1991 is to impose a "total embargo and try to shut the country down." The

Union Tactics On Trade Pact Rile President

WASHINGTON - Acknowledging that he is still 30 votes short in Congress. President Bill Clinton warned Sunday that failure by the United States to ratify the North American Free Trade Agreement would undermine his policies in Europe and Asia and slow efforts to secure global trade liberalization.

He also complained that labor unions were using "real roughshod, muscle-hound tactics" and "naked pressure" to threaten lawmakers politically who planned to vote in favor of the treaty. which labor opposes as a potential drain on U.S. jobs.

Mr. Clinton said that if the trade deal failed, his "ability to get done what is plainly in the economic interests of this country will be weakened.

The president acknowledged that be lacked firm commitments from about 30 members of the House of Representatives whose support is needed to pass the ratification resolution in a vote scheduled for Nov. 17. But he predicted victory, never-

He is clearly threatened with a setback in Congress on ratification of the accord, which would phase in a free trade zone in North America. His campaign for ratification has taken on urgent tones in recent days. His comments on Sunday represented his clearest warning that a congressional rejection would seriously weaken his presidency and U.S. trade goals around the globe.

Open' Europe Brings Influx of Heroin

By William Drozdiak

Washington Post Service AMSTERDAM - More porous borders in Eastern Europe and the war in Yugoslavia's former republics have spawned an epidemic of drug smuggling through a half-dozen new routes that are conveying record amounts of heroin to West European markets, according to American and European investigators.

The alarming rise in heroin traffic has coincided with a jump in clandestine weapons sales in Europe that officials say they fear may sus-tain and possibly expand the Balkan wars. "Merchants of death and merchants of drugs go hand in hand, and never has it been more true than now," a senior European drug intelligence officer said.

The heroin influx is reflected in plummeting street prices in Amsterdam, which has long served as a major drug distribution point because of its accessibility and tolerant culture. The police say heroin, which cost as much as $100 a gram a couple of years ago, is now being sold for as little as $25 a gram.

The glut of hard drugs is raising fears among policemen and social workers about a generation of addicts becoming victims of what Werner Keuth, head of Austria's central narcotics division, calls "a United Nations of drug smugglers involved in the trade into Europe.

Powerful Turkish clans that controlled Europe's beroin market now find their turf being ivaded by Russian and East European mafias. These include Serbian, Croatian and Albanian criminals who are also sending money, and in some cases weapons, to the Balkan war zone, police officials say.

According to Pierre Duc, head of the antidrug force in Lausanne, Switzerland, ethnic Albanians from the Serbian province of Kosovo have captured up to 70 perceot of the heroin market in Switzerland. About 2,000 Albanians from Kosovo are being held in Swiss

If Only Work Could Be Virtual, Too

By Barry James

PARIS - The virtual office is here. Which raises the potential problem of what to do with a lot of redundant, old-fashioned office space back on earth.

In the next three to five years, bundreds of major Western corporations are expected to move out of real estate and into cyber-space

As a result, their physical space requirements will change. Instead of supplying each employee with a desk or an office, many companies will find it cheaper, more efficient, more flexible and perhaps more agreeable to equip workers with portable computers and communications equipment and allow them to make their own working arrangements.

When these employees need to work at base, they will use "nonterritorial" or "virtual" offices available to all, or book meeting rooms or videoconference facilities, a recent concept known as "hoteling,"

"It's un office, not the office," said Michael Bell, director of Corporate Real Estate for Dun & Bradstreet in New York.

The virtual office is no utopian idea. In the United States, a number of companies, including Andersen Consulting. Ernst & Young, Digital Equipment, IBM and Aetna Life & Casualty, have already introduced it.

So important is the trend toward virtual offices likely to be, some expens say, that inner cities will have to be redefined and redesigned as work habits and transportation needs evolve.

"We already have a huge excess of office space in the United States just because of overbuilding," Mr. Bell said, "Add the reduced demand by corporations that are going through downsizing of people and then add the nonterritorial office concept. This is not good news for the traditional office building industry."

On top of this, many companies are further reducing their space requirements by transferring paper files to compact discs, according to Chris Moller, managing director of

Q. What is the likely outcome of the summit and the meeting of APEC foreign and economic ministers that precedes it?

A. We expect two major things from the ministerial meeting on Nov. 17 to 19. One is a declaration on a trade and investment framework. That is very important because it sets up a committee that is dedicated to reducing impediments to continued expansion of Asia-Pacific trade and investment. The committee. which will have a work program, is a milestone in the evolution of APEC since it was formed in 1989. Its a first step toward a more policy-making organiza-

Q. Which other countries are high prionly candidates for APEC membership and what can they contribute to the

A. There are two - Mexico and Papua New Guinea - that are the highest priority. Then Chile.

Mexico is a major economy in its own right. With Mexico, as well as the Canada and the U.S., we will have all three members of the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement in APEC. Papua New Guinea is not the size of Mexico but has tremendous natural resources. It would be the first Pacific island economy

Chile is Pacific-oriented and would be compatible with the APEC economies. But it is not clear yet whether there is a isus in support of Chile's member-

Q. Mr. Clinton has talked of creating a

A. I think part of the problem comes from the term "community." When many East Asians hear the word, they think of the European Community, a customs union, integration and questions of sovereignty. That is not on the agenda in the Asia-Pacific region at this time. Economies in this part of the world are market-driven and trade-driven, not rule-driven as in the EC. You could certainly have an Asia-Pacific economic community, and maybe even a free-trade area, that would be less rigid, and less bound by rules and regulations. That's likely to be the model developed in the Asia-Pacific.

Q. How strong is opposition among East Asian members to attempts to strengthen APEC as an organization and speed up the pace of regional economic

A. It varies. There is a whole spectrum of enthusiasm among the 15 member economies about how fast APEC should evolve and what it should become. The some others are pushing it ahead at a fairly brisk pace. Then there's a middle group that includes Thailand and Indonesia that does not want to move so quickly. At the other end, there is Malaysia that would like to see no, or very little.

APEC is a consensus organization. It has to move ahead step-by-step, not leap over obstacles.

Q. If the Uruguay Round of global trade negotiations fail to reach a comprehensive conclusion by the Dec. 15 dead-line, will that intensify efforts to turn APEC into a trans-Pacific free trade area, perhaps linking up with the planned North American Free Trade Area?

A. If the Uruguay round were to fail, I think that everybody in APEC would be concerned enough that they might well come together to figure out what to do about it and keep protectionism from overwhelming them. But it would be more damage-limitation than a substitute effort. All APEC members want the round to succeed because all have a heavy stake in the multilateral trading system

According to a report by Inter Press Service in Moscow, the Cen-According to the U.S. Defense tral Intelligence Agency knew Nuclear Agency, the United States about the test by 1977 and "gained conducted 235 atmospheric tests of access" to the film years ago. The U.S. Air Force published a brief account of the test early this year in its magazine.

The bomb, which had the power of 20,000 tons of TNT and was comparable to the bomb the United States dropped on Hiroshima, was set off at 9:33 A.M. on Sept. 14, 1954, between the cities of Kmbyshev (today called Samara) and Orenburg in eastern Russia, the

"All the guests from the Socialist countries, all the defense ministers were there," said Ivan Skyortskov, a former military officer who appears in the film. He said they watched from a mountain comfrom the explosion site.

At the time, about a million people lived within 160 kilometers of the site. Nuclear specialists said the extent of the fallout would have depended on weather conditions. Kuibyshev, about 130 kilometers Pacific.

to the west of the site, had about 800,000 inhabitants in the 1950s. and Orenburg, about 160 kilometers to the east, had about 265,000.

Five kilometers from the site was the village of Totskoye, and about 30 kilometers away the small town

Similar reports have come from Americans who lived downwind from atmospheric tests, among them inhabitants of Utah and of the Marshall Islands in the South

As the Soviet film shows troops in trenches and makeshift shelters, the narrator says that "over 45,000 personnel, thousands of cars, hundreds of guns and tanks" were concealed and carnouflaged. Villagers interviewed in the Finnish docuof Sorochinsk, where villagers in the film said many people later had been evacuated from Totskove.

Doctors' Shrinking Salary Syndrome

By Erik Eckholm New York Times Service NEW YORK - After a quarter century of surging incomes that made many of them millionaires, American doctors now face the prospect of stable or shrinking pay. Vulnerable to the biggest declines are specialists whose incomes have soured with the advent of expensive medical procedures - cardiac surgeons, for example, who make an average of $575,000 in private practice, and radiologists. who make an average of $310,000. At the same time, doctors offering primary care, who now average under $120,000 a year, may hold their ground or see modest increases.

HI-DIA

In Call Be

"The half-million-dollar-a-year doctor, I think, is in trouble now." said Dr. John M. Eisenberg, chairman of medicine at Georgetown University and chairman of an advisory group to Congress on federal payments to doctors. He predicted a leveling of pay, saying. "I suspect physicians will continue to be in the upper I percent of the Ameri-. less disparity among them."

The question of what income would be fair and reasonable is an Often unspoken subtext of the health care debate. As it promotes its health plan, the White House speaks of improving medical "efficiency," not of slashing salaries. Doctors warn of the possible impact of cost controls on patient welfare rather than about what new limits portend for their own liveli-

New pressure on doctors' incomes is already coming from insurers, who are more aggressively negotiating discounts and challenging high bills, and the federal government, which is reallocating Medicare payments among specialties as well as limiting total payments. That pressure will increase if Congress adopts anything resem-bling President Bill Clinton's health proposals, which would encourage more prepaid care and set limits on medical spending. Payments for "physician services" account for only about one-health care, federal data show. Clearly, restricting the pay of individual doctors offers no panacea for runaway bealth costs, but lower fees for many medical services will almost certainly be part of any plan for curbing health spending. The prospect of stagnant or reduced pay has caused soul-searching and anger among many doctors association, show that a minority of and growing conflict among specialists, who are lighting for shares of a pie that no one expects will keep expanding as in the past.

What many experts consider excess payments for surgical and diagnostic procedures may also be harming patients, medical experts say, subjecting them to unneeded procedures as it drives up costs.

The most frequently cited income statistics are compiled by the American Medical Association. 1ts most recent data, for 1991, found an average net income among all doctors of $171,000. Among 17 specialties listed, average incomes ranged from a low of $112,000 for family practitioners in a high of fifth of all the money spent on $274,000 for orthopedic surgeons. But these averages mask enormous differences between and within specialties.

> A more detailed and recent breakdown of incomes in 46 specialties and subspecialties provides a far more revealing picture of earnings at the upper end. These data, compiled by a medical trade doctors in certain specialties are making vastly more money than Those at the high end include some, bke cardiac surgeons, who have exceptionally long training, high stress and long working hours. They include others like radiologists, whose training is not as arduous and who often work normal office hours but use technicians to serve large numbers of patients at high fees.

These more detailed numbers were collected by the Medical Group Management Association in Englewood, Colorado, a trade group that includes 113,000 doctors in group practices with three or more members. These doctors make up "a fairly representative cross-section of American medicine," said David M. Gans, a senior project director at the association. Their incomes, however, tend to be somewhat higher than those of doctors in solo or academic practice.

At the high end, the group's data show that cardiac surgeons made an average of $575,000 in 1992, and neurosurgeous an average of $449,000. Orthopedic and hand surgeons averaged well over $300,000, while diagnostic radiologists averaged $310,000.

At the low end, doctors in family practice averaged $119,000, those in pediatrics $124,000 and those in general internal medicine $130,000.

The association also provides a breakdown of incomes within the specialties, showing that 10 percent of cardiac surgeons, for example, made more than $887,000, 10 percent of radiologists made more than $469,000, and 10 percent of ophtbalmologists more tban $434,000.

There is no objective way to determine how much doctors should make compared with other professions. Many doctors argue that the rise in their income over recent decades was not excessive compared with the increases in lawyers' or bankers' incomes. But those professionals make oo booes that making money is one of their chief goals, Doctors defending their incomes are more opt to cite their extensive training and the miraculous bene-fits they offer.

A Little Cold Water on Republican Victories

WASHINGTON — Edward J. Rollins, whose place as a Republican wise man was restored by his role in the upset victory of Christine Todd Whitman in the New Jersey governor's race, had stern advice for his fellow party members: "Republicans shouldn't start buying inaugural tickets."

The Republican sweep last week will no doubt lift morale, help fund raising and, perhaps most important for next year, aid the party's drive to recruit prime candidates. But amid their jubilation about winning all the big contests since President Bill Clinton was elected - the races last week for governor in New Jersey and Virginia and the mayoralty in New York - many Republicans agreed that the victories did little to offset the vision of a party still trying to find its ideological way since losing the White House.

Advisers to the three candidates who won last Tuesday agreed that the single element they shared was that they ran as outsiders who represented change.

Asked what the winning Republican candidates had in common Fred Meyer, chairman of the Texas Republican Party, said, "Bill Clinton. Pressed further, he retreated to a cliche. They believe in less taxes, less government."

Major Parties Close on Religious Affiliations

NEW YORK - The breakdown of religious affiliations within each major political party is pretty close to the breakdown of the nation as a whole, according to an analysis issued after the elections

The Democratic Party, often seen as the home of Roman Catholics. is only slightly more Catholic in make up (28 percent) than the Republican Party (24 percent) or the Independent Party (26 percent).

The Republican Party is roughly even with the Democratic Party in the number of "born again" Christians -41 percent to 39 percent. There is a greater variation when it comes to the party affiliation of Jews. Among Democrats, 3 percent are Jewish, among Independents, 2 percent, and among Republicans, I percent.

Clinton's 'No' to Balanced Budget Amendment

WASHINGTON - President Clintoo has informed Congress that he is opposed a proposed in a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget, asserting that "it would promote political gridlock and would endanger our economic recovery."

In a letter last week to the Senate majority leader. George J. Mirchell of Maine. Mr. Clinton said such an amendment would require increased taxes on working families, huge cuts in Social Security benefits and major cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. He also said the amendment would be bad economics, suggesting that whenever the economy faltered, it would force Congress to increase taxes in close a deficit, thus worsening recessions.

Mr. Clinton noted that he had pushed through a deficit reduction plan and supported a line-item veto to hold down the deficit. He said the amendment "would simply delay hones) debate over" some lough budgetary decisions.

The Senate is expected to vote in about two weeks on the amend ment. It would require a balanced budget in 1999.

President Clinton in a broadcast interview Sunday: "North Korea cannot be allowed to develop a nuclear bomb. We have to be very firm about it. This is a difficult moment in our relationship with them, and I think a difficult moment for them."

Amelia Earhart's Doomed Flight

No wonder Amelia Earhart disappeared. The pioneer aviatrix and her navigator, Fred Noonan, vanished in the central Pacific after accomplishing two-thirds of a round-the-world flight

According to a new film biography, which rounds up several well-known facts and which was recently broadcast by PBS, Miss Earhart, then 39, had no parachute. Mr. Noonan was a chronic drunk. Neither of them knew much about radio communication. They left their Morse code book behind. Miss Earhart transmitted clearly to the ship Itasca when she got lost, but could not find the right frequency to hear its helpful responses.

In 1932 she became the first woman to fly the Atlantic solo, and in 1935 she became the first person of either sex to fly from Hawaii to California, a longer distance than from the United States to Europe,

Short Takes

The seven chief public-school disciplinary problems in 1940; according to Congressional Quarter-ly, were talking out of turn, chewing gum, making noise, running in the halls, cutting in line, dresscode violations and littering. In 1990, the seven biggest problems were drug abuse, alcohol abuse, pregnancy, suicide, rape, robbery and assault.

The syndicated columnist George Will wrote in August that "nationally, about half of all urban public-school feachers with school-age children send their children to private schools." He repeated the figure on television a few days later. But the 50 percent figure is fiction. The Washington Post reports. It was traced through several sources to a 1986 study by Denis Doyle and Terry Hartle, then of the American Enterprise Institute. But Mr. Doyle says he made no such claim. The National Education Association says Gallup polls of NEA members put the figure at 8 percent to 10 percent.

An annual award by the American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for saving an animal's life has been named after the British film producer Duncan Gibbins, who suffered fatal burns this month trying to rescue his Siamese cat from the fire that swept the Malibu area of Southern California. The cat was in shock from singed paws and cuts but otherwise was doing fine. A firefighter, Jim Goodwin, said that as the burned director was being taken to the hospital he kept asking: "Where's my cat? Is my cat O.K.?"

The Princess phone is back in all its pink, peach or ivory glory. AT&T introduced the small, sleek phone in 1959, and it quickly became a fixture on the nightstand of many a teenage girl or twentysomething woman. But fashions change, and AT&T dropped the Princess in the mid-1980s. Now it is making the phooe again by popular demand — but with pushbuttoos instead of a circular dial. An AT&T spokesman said: "A lot of people were getting choked on technology. Rather than having a phone on their nightstand that has 82 buttons that do 22 things, they wanted a phone that they can pick up and call and that's that."

U.S. Deployment Would Be Provocative, Aidid Warns

By Keith Richburg Somali faction leader, General Mo-United States on Sunday to keep hammed Farrah Aidid, warned the thousands of new U.S. combat troops in the capital confined to their barracks or risk "another bloody confrontation" like last month's battle in which 18 U.S. servicemen were killed and 75 wounded.

"We are calling for the U.S. troops to confine to their positions to avoid a repetition of the unfortunate events of the past," General Aidid said, in a rare press conference held in a largely abandoned villa in an area that he controls.

He said that deploying the U.S. diplomats and military officials here have said that the U.S. infantrymen, backed by newly arrived M1A1 tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles, would begin fanning out through the city's main roads in the coming days to reopen lines of communication, secure the major supply routes and re-estab-lish a visible foreign troop presence on the capital's streets that have fallen back into the hands of teen-

At the press conference, General Aidid, who is technically still a fugitive from a UN arrest order, ruled out any negotiations with the United Nations to belp end the six-month crisis in the capital, and he called on all UN troops to be withdrawn from Somalia.

"There is no negotiation for the moment, and I am not expecting any." he said. He said the UN Operation in Somalia "has lost the confidence of the Somali people" and should "give up this operation in Somalia and leave the country."

General Aidid's comments on Sunday marked his first public statement in three weeks. They seemed to indicate that, following his earlier, conciliatory gestures, including the release of an American pilot and a Nigerian prisoner and his calling a unilateral cease-fire, he is shifting back to a more hard-line. confrontational position as the Senior members of General Aidid's militia bave lately expressed mounting frustration that the United Nations did not appear to be eagerly embracing Mr. Clinton's announced policy shift toward dialogue and away from a military manhant for General Aidid. UN officials here still insist they want to arrest him, and still hold dozens of Somali prisoners captured during the last few weeks of urban warfare against General Aidid's

It was uncertain, however, whether General Aidid's remarks marked mainly a rhetorical shift to a more confrontational tone, possibly to appease the more m faction within the Somali National Alliance militia, or whether a resumption of full-scale urban guerrilla warfare in the capital was now likely. General Aidid did not say specifically that U.S. troops would be attacked if they took to the streets, but he did say deploying

UN officials have said that all of the prisoners are given medical treatment and have been allowed visits by the International Committee of the Red Cross. But reporters have been prohibited from seeing them or even entering the detention facility.

General Aidid said Sunday that he called the unilateral cease-fire last month, and released U.S. Army Chief Warrant Officer Michael Durant and Nigerian trooper Umas Shantali as "gestures of good faith" by the Somali National Alliance. But he said be expected the Unit-

Despite his warnings to the Unit-ed States not to deploy its troops on the capital's streets, General Aidid appeared to go to some lengths to praise Mr. Clinton for shifting U.S. policy on Somalia while blaming the United Nations for the con-tinued stalemate in negotiations.

Book Says Bush Tried To Conceal Iraq Aid

WASHINGTON - President George Bush personally sought to thwart congressional inquiries into secret United States arming and financing of Iraq before the 1991 Gulf War, according to a book published Sunday.

The book. "Spider's Web: The Secret History of How the White House Illegally Armed Iraq." stops short of suggesting any criminal violation by Mr. Bush in this connection. But the author, Alan Friedman, says President Ronald Reagan's administration hid improper arms shipments to Iraq from Congress, in violation of laws requiring that intelligence oversight committees be informed of significant covert operations. Mr. Friedman says that senior Reagan officials skirted arms export-control legislation by using nongovernment operatives to ship the arms, including cluster bombs, from 1982 to 1985. The book asserts that the Central Intelligence Agency knew of hillions of dollars of secret loans funneled from the Atlanta branch of an Italian bank to Iraq.

Such loans helped fuel Iraq's nuclear and chemical weapons programs, but the CIA failed to notify U.S. law enforcement agencies, despite its statutory obligations, the book says. It portrays Mr. Bush, first as Mr. Reagan's vice president, then as president from 1989 onward, and James A. Baker 3d, who became Mr. Bush's secretary of stnte, as among the chief advocates of President Saddam Hussein during the 1980-87 Iran-Iraq war. "So convinced were they that American business interests would benefit from a close government relationship with Iraq that they turned a blind eye to the perils of treating Saddam Hussein as a friend." Mr. Friedman wrote. "They believed that neither the public nor Congress could be trusted with the truth of America's deepening involvement with Saddam. The book reports that Mr. Bush became involved in attempts to withhold documents from Congress when Democrats pressed for a review of the events leading to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

"Before long. George Bush began to play a personal role in the efforts to keep Congress from learning of his Iraqi policies." the book says.

It says that starting on April 8, 1991, Niebolas Rostow, counsel to Mr. Bush's National Security Council, began a series of meetings of lawyers from the White House, the CIA, the State and Commerce Departments and other agencies aimed at stalling requests for Iraq-related documents from Congress. Minutes of the so-called Rostow group meetings confirmed that

Mr. Bush was being consulted on a regular basis, the book says. A reporter for the Financial Times of London, Mr. Friedman was chief reporter in a 1991 Iraq-related joint investigation with the ABC News program "Nightline." He is a four-time winner of British Press

German Justice 'Blind in the Right Eye'

By Stephen Kinzer New York Times Service

BERLIN - When the police quickly released four of the live skinheads accused of beating an American athlete a week ago, they were acting under criminal justice policies that are coming under increasing attack here.

Many politicians and criminologists complain that the German legal system is "blind in the right eye," meaning that the police, prosecutors and judges tend to be lenient with rightists or neo-Nazis. "We are seeing the result of trends that have existed here for decades," said Hermann Blei, a law professor at the Free University in Berlin. "Punishments for violent crimes have become progressively less severe. When there is a political motive, a rightist defendant is usually treated more gently than one who comes from the left."

Anger over the release of four of the young men accused of beating the American athlete, Duncan Kennedy, was in part a result of the international scandal that was touched off by the incident. But it also came after several other cases that have focused attention on the criminal justice system here.

Last month, two men accused of setting a fire at the former Sachsenhausen concentration camp were found not guilty. Both had confessed to the crime, but later said their confessions had been extracted under pressure. The fact is that prosecutors presented a very weak case, and it does not speak well of them that they relied only on the confes-sions," an angry state legislator, Frank Wer-ner, said after the verdict.

The director of the foundation that supervises memorials to victims at Sachsenhausen and other concentration camps near Berlin, Jurgen Dittberner, called the verdict "a tragedy for the German justice system."

Anger at the outcome of the Sachsenhausen trial was heightened because the verdict came as the defendant in another highly publicized assault case was also set free. That defendant confessed to stabbing the tennis star Monica Seles in a successful attempt to remove her from competition and allow his idol, Steffi Graf, to regain her top ranking.

A judge ruled that the assailant was not responsible for his actions because of his mental condition at the time. He was set free unconditionally, with the judge even declining to forbid him from attending future ten-

After the two verdicts were announced, Germany's largest-circulation newspaper, headline that said, "Pigsty Justice — Criminals Do Fine, but Watch Out if You Park

In another verdict that aroused much public anger, a judge in Dresden sentenced three defendants found guilty of killing a Mozambican laborer. Two were given probation and fines, and the third was sentenced to two and half years in prison.

These cases contrast sharply with the treatment accorded members of the leftist Red Army Faction who have been convicted of serious crimes. Many have been given sentences that stretch into decades, and some are serving "life-plus" terms. Irmgard Moller. for example, who was found guilty of taking part in groups that committed murder, is serving a term of life plus 15 years.

There has been an outcry at the way the German justice system operates, and I am glad about that," said Jutta Limbach, Berlin's chief prosecutor. Chancellor Helmut Kohl bas said he will stress the crime issue in the federal elections next year. His government recently proposed a package of new laws, including one that would raise the maximum penalty for inflicting an injury that is not life-threatening from three years to five years.

New York Times Service ROME - Fifteen years after terrorists kidnapped and killed Aldo Moro in postwar Italy's most enduring national trauma, investigators have been confronted with new evidence suggesting that the wrong man was convicted of the killing and that key testimony in court cases was false. The Moro case obsesses Italians just as John F. Kennedy's assassination grips Americans. And like the killing in Dallas in 1963, the 1978 slaving of the respected former prime minister has produced an endless stream of conspiracy

If they were ever proved, however, they would almost certainly implicate politicians who are still alive. That is one reason Italians find them so fascinating at a time when the country is confronting a widespread corruption scandal and demands for political and economic change, The affair has assumed added urgency in what seems like a resurgence of Red Brigades activity against the United States military bere. The Red Brigades, one of the most ruthless of the urban guerrilla gangs in Europe in the late 1970s. was blamed at the time for Mr. Moro's kidnapping and murder.

Shots were fired last month at Aviano air base, the installation in northern Italy that is used by U.S. fighter aircraft to fly patrols over Bosnia-Herzegovina. Three suspected Red Brigades members were arrested two weeks ago along with four organized-crime suspects, and the police discovered plans for kidnapings of business executives.

Although Interior Minister Nicola Mancino dismissed the terrorists as "isolated phenomena," some commentators have expressed fears later in the trunk of a car parked in that terrorism may be reviving.

In the last month, testimony by people who took part in the Moro killing, including former Red Brigades terrorists, has contradicted the version of events accepted by the courts when the killers and kidnappers came to trial.

anda, a former Red Brigades ter- in a Red Brigades hideout in Milan rorist, has told investigators that Prospero Gallinari, the man convicted of killing Moro after his 55 days in captivity, did not carry out the slaying, even though Mr. Gallinari has said repeatedly that as a Red Brigades member, be accepts Previously, only three Red Brigades terrorists were positively identified as the captors who stayed with Mr. Moro throughout his ordeal.

Mr. Maccari had not previously been brought into the Moro investigation, and he has denied the charges of murder, kidnapping. membership in a terrorist group brought against him as a result of Ms. Faranda's testimony.

Ms. Faranda's version has been contradicted by another former Red Brigades terrorist, Mario Morenti, who broke a long silence on the affair when he said in an interview with two Italian journalists published two weeks ago that he alone had fired the fatal shots. "I would never have allowed anyone else to do it." Mr. Moretti said.

Ms. Faranda indicated that both Mr. Maccari and Mr. Moretti carried out the murder,

Mr. Gallinari, the convicted killer, has dismissed the whole controversy. He is serving a life sentence.

Mr. More was kidnapped and five of his bodyguard were killed on March 16, 1978, as he drove to parliament, Fifty-five days later, be was shot and killed in the garage below the apartment where he had been held, and his body was found central Rome.

At the heart of the mystery is the question of what Mr. More told his captors. According to Francesco Biscione, the author of a study of Mr. Moro's responses to their questions, sections of what the politician wrote may have been mysteri-

"This is an indication, but not proof, that something is missing."

WHAT MAJOR LINK BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE HAS JUST OPENED? NO, NOT THE CHANNEL TUNNEL (BUT YOU'RE CLOSE.)

You're very close, in fact. The link we speak of is the new Elf station, Clacket Lane, England. And it's a mere stone's throw from the nearly completed Channel Tunnel.

It's also one of the largest service stations in the whole of Europe (what else would you expect from France's largest company?) and will be supplying petrol to around 4,000 vehicles every day.

However, Elf can hardly be called strangers to British shores. We already have a presence of 800 stations in the UK

If you add this to the 7,000 plus throughout the rest of Europe and West Africa, you begin to realise just how big we really are. Names can be misleading sometimes, can't they?

Israel and Jordan Reportedly Reach 'Understandings'

By Clyde Haberman

Ver York Times Service
JERUSALEM — King Hussein of Jordan and Israel's foreign minister, Shimon Peres, were reported Sunday to have signed "understandings" on economic ties and other forms of cooperation at a secret meeting in Amman.

The reported understandings. neither denied nor confirmed by senior Israeli officials, fall short of a draft peace treaty. The neighboring countries are technically in a state of war, but they have had secret high-level contacts for decades and presumably could make a formal peace in short order.

But several officials told The Jerusalem Post that documents of some sort had been signed last week on economic cooperation and other issues, suggesting a hig step toward an eventual treaty.

"We are very near, apparently, to having an agreement." Mr. Peres. whose meeting with the king lasted nine hours, said in Jerusalem on Saturday night.

A learning question, other officials here cautioned, is how far and how fast King Hussein is prepared to go, it was not clear, they said, if agreed cooperation between the two countries could actually take place before a formal treaty. It is debatable, they added, whether the king would be so bold as to sign such a treaty before Israel comes to terms with Syria, whose separate peace negotiations with the Israelis bave been stalled for months.

Officials here said they may have a better idea of where they stand after Monday, when Jordan is to hold its first multiparty general elections in nearly four decades, A surge of public support for Islamic fundamentalists could complicate negotiations, the officials said.

On another front in Israel's fourtrack peace talks - with Jordan. Syria, Lebanon and the Palestinians - negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization were set to resume in Cairo on Monday after a suspension of nearly a week. In another five weeks, under Israel is supposed to begin withdrawing its forces and transferring civil au-thority to the Palestinians in the occupied territories, starting in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank city of Jericho. Hammering out critical details has not been easy, bowever. and some officials here doubt that negotiators will meet their Dec. 13 deadline unless the pace picks up.

At immediate issue is whether ambiguous wording in the agreement requires the Israelis to withdraw their soldiers completely, as the Palestinians say, or instead to redeploy them within Gaza and the Jericho district, which is the Israeli interpretation. Palestinian delegates broke off the talks last Tuesday after objecting to an Israeli redeployment plan that they say would leave Israel controlling nearly half of the coastal strip's 151 square miles.

But officials said that the bargaining would begin again in Cairo on Monday, a shift from the Egyp-tian Red Sea resort of Taba, intended to make it easier for negoriators to avoid journalists.

Rabbi Wounded in Attack Palestinian attackers Sunday sprayed gunfire at the car of a rabbi and former parliament member who is a leading advocate of Jewish settlement in the occupied territories, wounding him and killing his driver, The New York Times reported from Hehron in the Israelioccupied West Bank.

The drive-hy shooting at the car of Rabbi Haim Druckman was the sixth slaying of an Israeli in the territories since the signing of the Israeli-Palestinian agreement in September, It unleashed a fresb wave of retaliatory violence by Jewish settlers outraged by attacks by Arabs opposed to the accord.

In Hebron and elsewhere in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip. settlers torched Arab-owned vehicles and smashed their windows. blocked highways with burning tires and stoned Arab homes.

Life at the White House Sometimes Gets Lonely

WASHINGTON -- President Bill Clinton expressed frustration

Sunday at the isolation of life in the White House, saying he sometimes felt "out of harmony with the American people." A presidential jog involves a coterie of Secret Service agents and two vans of reporters —a reflection on the White House fife that Mr.

Clinton said he finds confining.
"I don't know whether it's the finest public housing in America or the crown jewel of the prison system." he said of the White House. Mr. Clinton, who jogs six days a week and has reportedly changed his eating habits to lose weight, said he was making some headway.

"Number two," the president continued. "I'll be able to say what I have been saying to the Asians: Asia's important to us, but we want free trade. We want access to your markets. They will see us develop-ing the NAFTA market, which is not just Mexico, it's Latin America. Canada, the whole nine yards, and that will be enormous pressure on them to conclude these world trade agreements, these GATT talks, by the end of the year. It will also help us with Europe to do that."

A potentially pivotal moment in the campaign for NAFTA may come Tuesday night, when Vice President Al Gore and Ross Perot debate the pact on a television talk show. Mr. Perot, the billionaire tial candidate, has vigorously campaigned against the treaty, saying it would result in a job rush to Mexi-

Mr. Dole, who supports the trade accord, said it was a big mistake for the White House to go up against Mr. Perot.

OW did George W. Bush go popular presidents in modern history in March 1991 to being voted out of office 18 months later?

In "Hell of a Ride: Backstage at the White House Follies, 1989-1993," John Podhoretz, a professional speech writer, has written a shrewdly plausible analysis with a wit (verging on occasional silliness) that makes you wish all political studies could be this lighthearted and succinct.

Working his way up the White House chain of command like some particularly corrosive form of rust, Podhoretz performs a Parkinsonian dissection of bureaucratic inertia that prohably applies to any failing enterprise on the globe. tn his most outrageous chapter, "In and Out of the Loop, or. the Gnomish Gnostics Meet Skull and Bones," the author compares Richard Darman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, and John Summu, the White House chief of staff until late in 1991, to the early Christian Gnosties "who believed there was a hidden meaning to the words of Jesus only they could decipher by mystical knowledge with which only they had been endowed hy God."

Then Podhoretz refers to Bush's version of his Yale secret society Skull and Bones as he writes, " the end, the Gnostics and the Skull and Bones types (Bush, Brady and others) had a strange symbiotic re-lationship, like an alliance between the nerds and the jocks ar some fvy

He continues: "The Skull and Bones boys went off and made the hig plays in the big games in Pana-ma and fraq. The Gnomish Gnos-tics did the jocks' homework (domestic policy), and when even that wasn't enough, they went into the computer system and changed their C's to A's."

But the relationship didn't work. "The Skull and Bones boys may have made a couple of big plays in Iraq, but they never won the game."

Taking more serious aim at the Bush presidency's failings, Podhoretz suggests that Bush suffered for what he describes as a betraval of the Reagan revolution. Where Reagan was "the Tellon president," to whom no blame adhered because he always contended that the system was out of control, Bush became une vektio pri erything stuck, "because he reveled the fact that he was the king of Washington, the insider's insider."

When the Reaganites were abandoned by Bush's followers, Podhoretz writes with a certain excess. "they came to hate Bush with the bottomless rage of a shy and awk-ward straight-A coed who, courted aggressively by a Big Man on Camous she does not trust, receives. flowers and candy and love poems, and with some misgivings allows herself to be taken to bed; whereupon, the seduction complete, he rises quickly and is out the door to spread the word that she is easy, she is anybody's for the taking." Of course, all this is written from the perspective of someone with recognizable right-wing credentials. Podhoretz worked in the Reagan administration and has worked at The American Spectator and The Washington Times. In an afterword, he thanks the Lynde and Harry Bradley Foundation and the John M. Ohn Foundation for letting him write the book and delay "the more scholarly project they had initially funded."

All the same, his argument

In "Hell of a Ride" - from Bush's description of his presidency - Podhoretz is the very opposite of solipsistic. Sections called "Freeze Frames" alternate with the analytical chapters and offer what be calls portraits of specific unnamed White House staffers, which explain, and mock, Bush's followers. Whether you agree with Podhoretz's views, his book is worth reading, if only as a caustic for the fivepound doorstops that will more solemn commentators on the

New Blow In Japan's Scandal

Shadow Is Cast On the Coalition

By James Sterngold New York Times Service

TOKYO - The top strategist of Japan's new reform-minded gov-ernment has been implicated in a bribery scandal that has claimed several dozen local politicians and construction executives, casting a shadow over the future of the governing coalition and of Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa.

The strategist, Ichiro Ozawa.

whose defection from the Liberal Democratic Party in June helped end 38 years of one-party rule in Japan, confirmed reports that he had accepted a cash contribution equal to $46,000 from a construction company late last year. The reports said Mr. Ozawa had heen paid the sum twice a year for several years, but he confirmed receiving the money only once.

Most of the top executives of the company, Kajima Corp., have recently been arrested on charges that they bribed mayors and pre-fectural governors to obtain lucra-tive public-works contracts.

Politicians are prohibited from accepting more than 1.5 million yen, the equivalent of $14,000. from any one company in a year.
But the rule is routinely skirted by having large contributions broken up and offered to "support groups" that influential politicians use to build huge campaign chests.

Although acknowledging the contribution, Mr. Ozawa's office. said last week that it did not believe the payment was illegal and that it was investigating. "It was a legitimate donadon," Mr. Ozawa snapped at a group of reporters shadowing him.

Whether the payment does prove illegal or not, it could not have come at a worse time for Mr. Hosokawa's government, which came into office in August pledging to clean up Japan's corruption-ridden

Mr. Hosokawa vowed that he would step down if he did not pass a package of sweeping reforms of the electoral and campaign financing laws this year. To meet that deadline, he must bring debate to a close and begin moving the legislation within a week. .

But with the news of the pay-ments to Mr. Ozawa, a behind-thescenes power broker in the new government, some opposition poli-ticians from the Communist Party have demanded that he testify before parhament.

A debate on this issue could tie up parliament and delay the legislation on political reform. That promises to transform the next few the future of Japanese politics could hinge.

The two previous governments fell after failing to fulfill pledges on electoral reform, which would create a new single-seat districting sys-tem and tighter campaign contri-hution limits. Mr. Ozawa's admission has thus presented a crucial test for the diverse coalition of Socialists and conservatives led by Mr. Hosokawa.

New Zealand Governing Party Rebuffed in Vote

WELLINGTON, New Zealand -- Voters have delivered a stinging rebull to New Zealand's ruling National Party, an unexpected result that left the House of Representatives without a clear majority.

The government's harsh economic measures were seen as largely to blame.

At a time when China's population of 1.1 billion is enjoying a harvest of plenty relative to any other time in its history, a growing number of environmental scientists are concerned that the country's water resources and farmlands will not be able to keep up with the demands being placed on them to feed ever more robust expansion.

"What is at stake here is the ecological underpinning of Chinese society," said a physicist who is spending a year in China studying scientific issues for the U.S. State Department.

China's water predicament is not unique. Dozens of countries, par-ticularly in the Middle East and Africa, face diminishing water resources and fast-growing popula-tions. Even in the United States, a large aquifer that irrigates the wheat and com belt in the Midwest has suffered serious depletion.

North Korea Should Listen

The door is ball open, and the prospect on the other side is dauntingly plain: a nuclear North Korea and behind it, in all likelihood, a nuclear Iran followed by nuclear X, Y and Z. The door can still be shut, and that intal proliferation prevented, but it will take a hard decision. From what President Bill Clinton said on television on Sunday, he is ready to make the decision.

There is pretty solid scientific evidence that Kim Il Sung and his son, Kim Jong Il, have secretly assembled the means to make a nuclear weapon. They are obliged by their country's membership in the International Atomic Energy Agency to let the IAEA's inspectors go and check that evidence. They have, for months, been evading that obligation. If the Pentagon's claim that they have temforced their army along South Korea's border is correct, they are now saying, in effect: Shut up, or else.

It may be bluff. But the North Korean leaders are an explosively unpredictable pair. And in the past year they may have been given reason, alas, to believe that it was the rest of the world that was bluffing.

Unul Mr. Clinton spoke on Sunday, the world's reaction to the challenge was well short of forthright. There have been hints of danegeld (more diplomatic recognition. American help in peaceful nuclear programs, cancellation of a military exercise in South Korea) if only those IAEA inspectors were let in. It is dangerous to offer people a price not to do something that they should not be doing in the first place; bot the offers have anyway not won Pyongyang over.

There has been talk of United Nations economic sanctions, and also audible doubting whether China would let such sanctions happen. And there have been leaks in Washington which made clear that part of the Clintoo administration until very recently thought that the only other option, military action, might not work.

Every soldier, and ex-soldier, knows the risks of the fighting option. It would be much better if North Korea could be kept nonnuclear by peaceful means. But it is necessary to list the consequences that will follow if nothing stops North Korea from going nuclear.

South Korea will be at much greater risk of attack, because the Pyongyang Kims may be starting to reckon that their only chance of survival is a takeover of the successful South. Japan will be horrified, and could react either by taking a long new stride down the rearmament road or by withdrawing into neo-isola-tionism. And the effects could reach well beyond East Asia. If lonely North Korea successfully breaks the world's nuclear rules, other countries are going to reckon that they can, too. We would have a multi-nuclear 21st century.

Of all the tests facing the post-Cold War world, this is perhaps the sharpest. It needs both clarity of mind and unmistakable resolution. Mr Clinton seems to have taken the point. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

Lessening the Nuclear Risk

For years, the Soviet Union said it would use nuclear arms only in retaliation against a nuclear attack. But its military posture and practices never corresponded to that stated policy. Soviet forces stood poised to unleash a devastating strike at a moment's notice. Now. with its army in disarray and China looming larger on its border, an uneasy Russia has announced a revised nuclear doctrine; it is abandoning its pledge of no first use of nuclear arms. But even as its stated position gets more belligerent, its practices are becoming more benign. Indeed, Russia is behaving for the first time as if it truly had a no-first-use policy. It is removing the nuclear warheads from some of its intercontinental missiles, for example, and taking its nuclear arms off alert. The United States has never pledged not to use nuclear weapons first. Its policy was, and till is, to use nuclear arms in the event of n conventional attack on U.S. allies.

Leonid Brezhnev of the Soviet Union pronulgated "no first use" in 1982. But despite its public promise. Moscow kept its nuclear forces in exposed positions and on hair-trigger alert, ready to launch them rather than ride out a U.S. attack. There was always a risk that an intense crisis could inadvertently explode into nuclear war as each side, fearing that the other might shoot first, tried to shoot sooner.

Now both sides are reaching the same sound conclusion: that it would be prudent to take their nuclear forces off alert and adopt other, fail-safe measures. The United States has removed 90 percent of the warheads from missiles covered by the strategic arms reduction treaty. Russia seems to be following suit. It would be useful if Kazakhstan and Ukraine would do so, ton. Tactical nuclear arms have been withdrawn from forward bases, except for a few U.S. bombers in Britain, and bomber forces are off alert.

Both sides could move even further from the brink. Washingtoo can safely send fewer missile-carrying submarines to sea and motbball some of them. Both sides could dismantle the deadly donmsday systems designed to automate retaliation in the event of nuclear attack. And both sides could call off their attack subs that still bump missilecarrying snbs in a recklessly provocative undersea cat-and-mouse game.

Finally, both sides might stop talking about first use. Threatening nuclear attack only encourages others to think about acquiring onclear arms of their own.

None of these measures will end the threat of nuclear war. But they could lessen the risk

For a Tolerant Islam

Aside from Salman Rushdie himself. no one has suffered more from the effects of the death decree against him than intellectuals and artists within the Muslim world, for hom his continuing misery functions as an effective deterrent to (brave writers and artists in that category some living in the West but still, as the Rushone case proved, vulnerable - have oow hit back. In Paris last week they issued a book "For Rushdie" and in defense of his right -.- id. by implication, theirs - to publish what he pleases, whether or not they agree with it. Not only did these writers sign their names -among them are the Egyptian Nobel laureate Naguib Mahfouz, the prizewiooiog French Moroccan novelist Tahar Ben Jalloun, the Lebanese writer Amin Malouf - but they also wrote essays for the volume about Mr. Rushdie's novel, spelling out their views of the issues he raised and their reasons for defending his right to speak freely. Those writers, born or practicing Muslims, who can be con-demned by the late ayatollah's vicious logic as "upostates" and therefore subject to the death penalty, have a lot to fear. But they also evidently are awake to the magnitude of the issue that Mr. Rusbdie's case represents for civilized nations and for Islam itself.

That latter question - wbether Islam will change, or a reformist version of it develop in the modern world that no society has been able to wall out - is of keen interest to a vast audience, but to oone more than to Muslims who, like Mr. Ben Jalloun, taught a "tolerant Islam" that has nothing to do with the current emphasis on repression. Pressures for such a "tolerant Islam" from people like these writers could grow oow that more and more Muslims live in secular, pluralist countries or feel the sharp need for intellectual freedom in countries that lack it.

The Rushdie case is symptom, oot cause, of such pressures. In its starkness and worldwide visibility it is forcing many people both inside and outside Islam to decide where they stand on free speech and dissent. A declaration by Iranian intellectuals and artists in exile condemning the fatwa — again, at on trivial risk — has grown from 50 to 162 names in eight months. There are also the grimmer cases, to which the the Paris volume draws attention, of dissidents and artists (like the Egyptian writer Farag Foudal murdered for their views since the Rushdie farwa but to far less outcry. Who wins in this giant struggle matters, and not just to the world of Islam.

Slump in Anglo-Saxon Japan

It used in be claimed that there were two types of capitalist economy: Japan, and every-one else. The claim was never well founded; but every passing month of Japan's recession suggests that there is now a new way in divide the rich industrial economies into different camps. There is the Anglo-Saxon type — suffering from a hangover after a boom and bust in stock and property markets, laden with consumer debts and dispirited by falling asset prices. And there is the more conventional, mainly Continental European variety — mercifully free of consumer debt and financial hangovers, but depressed by a drop in demand and the normal business cycle of inventories and investment. In the first camp can be found the most unlikely tent-fellows: America, Britain and, yes, Japan. The big difference is that [Japan] has ample fiscal resources to spare, it has used them to good effect; three public works packages in the past two years have doubled the growth rate of government investment and probably rescued the economy from severe shrinkage. The prime minister. Morihiro Hosokawa now hints of a further boost, through a cut in income tax to be clawed back in later years by raising sales taxes. This would be welcome. But too much should not be expected of it. Recovery is likely to be slow, given that consumers, banks and companies remain weighed down with debt. Such is the lot of the Anglo-Saxon economy.

Should the World Take a Hard Line With North Korea?

No. Work Out the Crisis

By Dave McCurdy

The writer is o Democratic member of the Armed Services Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON —Still reeling from crises in Somalia and Hani, the Clinton administration faces another foreign test, this time in North Korea. Defense Secretary Les Aspin's trip to Asia last week brought heightened attention to North Korea's nuclear weapons program. The United States needs to move quickly to avoid n confrontation, but also must temper an impulse to punish North Korea with economic sanctions.

International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors found last year that North Korea may have reprocessed plutonium at least three times, not just once, as it has claimed. We have oo idea how much plutonium it may have or how close it is to a bomb. The IAEA has demanded that it be allowed to inspect two possible plotonium waste sites. Pyongyang has refused permission. arguing that the sites are conventional military facilities — a blatant lie.

Calls are mounting for decisive action. Unit-ed Nations-mandated economic sanctions offer little hope of success.

If we go to the Security Council for sanctions and China rejects them, as it may, North Korea will believe that it is off the hook.

If sanctions are imposed, North Korea would likely role ont any dialogue until they were removed — and China could allow goods to flow across the border anyway. If sanctions pushed the North to the brink of economic collapse, it would only further the country's instability, which is precisely what South Korea and Japan want to avoid.

Sanctions would probably incite North Korea to hasten its nuclear work. Thus, pressure for the United States to bomb the North's nuclear plants would grow — even though a raid might not disable the plants, would shower radiation across Japan and South Korea and could provoke North Korean retalization on Seoul Surgical air strikes could spark a second Korean war. Americans might rightly ask: Are we ready to go to war over a threat to Japan and South Korea? If we failed in a confrontation with an African warlord, how can we go toe-to-toe with President Kim Il Sung, who has thrived on brinkmanship for four decades?

A hard-line approach would lead to new arguments with China, South Korea and Japan, all of which prefer diplomacy to threats. America's dedication to nonproliferation cannot succeed if its approach is at odds with the very countries it is designed to protect.

The challenge is to avoid a showdown while holding firmly to our demand for thorough in-spections. The goal should not be to eliminate all nsk — that is impossible — but to keep the North from obtaining more plutonium and from turning the nuclear material it has into weapons. What should we do? First, not reinvent sanctions that already exist. The United States, Japan and South Korea already deny North Korea economic and political contacts, and Russia has placed trade on a hard-currency-only basis. We should insist that our allies not invest in the North until the nuclear issue is resolved. We should consider a policy of "no blame" for past transgressions. North Korean leaders resist inspections for fear of being caught in their lies. We should say that, like South Africa, if they came clean they would face no new sanctions. We should give them face-saving incentives to allow inspections. We could let them inspect U.S. military bases in South Korea, to verify that no tactical nuclear weapons are present. And we should support South Korea's offer to end its joint military exercises with U.S. troops. Given our pressing domestic issues and for-eign policy missteps, the United States is in no shape to play nuclear brinkmanship with North Korea. We need to push looming crisis to an amicable conclusion and move on.

In Somalia the price of failure is 29 American lives. In Korea the price could be war. The New York Times.

Yes, Threaten Sanctions

By Zalmay M. Khalilzad

WASHINGTON — North Korea is playing VV a frightening game of cat and mouse in its efforts to build nuclear weapons without risking significant reprisal from the international comnity. Other countries, and particularly the United States, should not let the North Koreans get away with it. We should threaten them with economic sanctions, and soon.

The bomb program came to international attention last winter, after the International Atomic Energy Agency detected that North Korea was diverting fissionable material from its civilian nuclear program.

To determine how much diversion had occurred, the agency demanded to inspect two sites. The North Koreans refused and threat-ened to withdraw from the Nuclear Nonprolif-eration Treaty. But they did offer to discuss the issue with the United States. After two rounds of meetings during the summer, they agreed to continue abiding by the treaty and to renew discussions with the atomic energy agency.

But Pyongyang is still refusing to allow in-spection of the two sites. Not only that, it has impeded the IAEA's work at sites previously under routine inspection, and ultimately sus pended talks with the agency — whose director recently reported to the United Nations that monitoring cameras at the routine sites had run out. The implication is that the agency cannot tell whether still more diversion is taking place.

After breaking off discussions with the agency, the North Koreans expressed a willingness to talk with the United States again. And last month there were talks. The longer this game goes on, the closer the North Koreans get to building nuclear weapons. If they succeed, the risks are grave. The chances of war between North and South Korea would increase. Seoul and Tokyo might well consider nuclear programs of their own. And North Korean success in defying the IAEA could wreck America's global nonproliferation policy. America's global nonproliferation policy. the North Koreans. They should be told that unless they allow inspections by the IAEA both routine and special - by Dec. 1, Washington will seek imposition of economic sanctions by the United Nations.

The sanctions would ban imports of petroleum products, exports of weapons and other products from North Korea, and financial iransfers to North Korea.

Effective sanctions would require the cooperation of China, North Korea's most important trading partner. To get China's support, the United States must make cooperation on the North Korean nuclear program the litmus test of U.S.-Chinese relations. This issue should be the central item on President Bill Clinton's agenda when he meets the Chinese president. Jiang Zemin, in Seattle next week. He might forcefully remind Mr. Jiang of the implications for Japan's nuclear posture.

For now, as it pursues sanctions, Washington should take two other steps. First, it should increase U.S. military capability in the region, and South Korea's. This would help discourage North Korean adventurism and signal to Pyongyang that it is on a dangerous course. It would also enforce a blockade, if need be. Second, Washington should hold out a carrot, telling the North Koreans that if they cooperate on the ouclear issue it will lead an international effort to help them and will consider ways to end North Korea's international isolation.

But it is obvious that the costs of relying solely on diplomacy are unacceptably high. Recent events in Sonnalia and Hairi may have embold-ened the North Koreans to think that they can play cat and mouse forever. To change their calculations, America needs to make clear that it has decided to stop playing.

The writer, director of strategy at the Rand Corporation, was an assistant undersecretary of defense in the Bush administration. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Clinton's in Alphabet Soup: NAFTA, APEC, GATT, NATO

WASHINGTON — Don't put all your money on any Al Gore-Ross Perot debate on NAFTA settling that issue. There is still a stretch run in which the foreign policy borse could save or doom NAFTA and Bill Clinton's hopes for an early relaunch of his political fortunes. No matter the outcome of any such debate, the White House cannot hope to gain a win-ning edge on the emotional and confusing issue of the number of jobs that NAFTA will alleg-edly eliminate or add. The White House, which expects to go into the final week of debate 20 to 30 votes short of victory in the House of Representatives, has to neutralize the jobs issues. That would clear the way for an appeal by President Clinton to wavering Democrats not to undermine, in the Nov. 17 vote, America's standing abroad by denying the president the power and authority to make foreign policy.

That is bow! define "foreign policy borse" the November of the November of

in this race, NAFTA, of course, is the North American Free Trade Agreement, which will. gradually tie Mexico into a tariff-free zone with the United States and Canada. I shrink from defining the Clinton White House for you. Newspapers can only do so much. The "will too"/"will not" exchanges on jobs between Mr. Perot and Lee Iacocca have helped the administration on an issue it could not dominate. There are enough experts and By Jim Hoagland demagogues on each side to confuse anyone who is oot bound by ideology or special interests to the pro- or anti-NAFTA camp.

The presidential-powers argument has been so abused and overstated by previous administrations that it are the protrations that it may not work for Mr. Clinton. More's the pity. Not only is NAFTA right on the merits, but the president's authority abroad would be significantly weakened by a congressional defeat. A defeat for NAFTA would be a psychological turning point for America. A few months ago NAFTA looked to the administration like the opening salvo in n fall offensive on trade and jobs. If the salvo sputters — if NAFTA goes down — the fall offensive is likely to turn into a fall debacle. As Congress votes on Nov. 17, Mr, Clinton will be preparing for an Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit meeting in Seattle. Two objectives dominate Mr. Clinton's Seattle agenda: to show the American public that he has a handle on economic relations with. Asia's two giants, Japan and China, and to Round trade negotiations climax. Those ocgotiations, part of the GATT rules for global trade, have a Dec. 15 deadline. The talks are currently deadlocked by a dispute between the United States and France over agricultural export subsidies. The last carom in Mr. Clinton's three-cushion foreign policy shot occurs in Brussels on Jan. 11, where a successful NATO summit meeting could heal the wounds inflicted on U.S.-European relations by discord over Bosnia. A good NATO summi would be the icing on the alphabet soup of NAFTA, APEC and GATT and would help Mr. Clinton establish his leadership at home through success abroad.

That is the way it looked this past summer, after Mr. Clinton performed well at the Group of Seven summit meeting in Tokyo. But the "uncertain saxophone" (in Jesse Helms's phrase) that the administration has blown in Somalia, Haiti and Bosnia since then, and the assault on NAFTA by Mr. Perot and organized labor, have changed the picture. In France, Prime Minister Edouard Balladur is waiting for the NAFIA vote before deciding on his endgame in the dispute with his European Community partners and Washington over GATT. A NAFTA defeat weakens Mr. Clinton's hand in the triangular.

negotiations with Japan and Europe.

GATT in turn casts a big shadow on the NATO summit. President François Mitterrand, who has the final word on France's foreign policy, has blocked Mr. Balladur's forward-leaning proposals on French cooperation with NATO. Mr. Mitterrand is apparently waiting to see how the agriculture dispute turns out before deciding how cooperative or obstructive to be at the Brussels meeting. Passing NAFTA will not guarantee that the . 34 1 . Jak other pieces will fall into place, but defeat will shrink the odds of American success dramatically. That in turn nails Mr. Clinton's feet to the floor when he was hoping to soar off on another comeback flight.

He has shown a remarkable ability to amass confidence and support momentarily and then fritter it away. His administration is likely to be a series of alternating peaks and troughs rather than the straight line up and straight line down traveled by George Bush in his four years.

That says a great deal about Mr. Clinton, but even more about the electorate he seeks to lead -an electorate insecure on trade and the economy and fearing that deals with Japan and Europe take jobs and resources away from the American worker.

A defeat for NAFTA would say to the world that America now fears it can be manimplated and outsmarted in a trade deal with a Third. World neighbor whose economic weight is negligible in American terms. No president could lead convincingly in those circumstances. On a close call, Congress has to take that into consideration.

Time for China to Address Worries About Its Military Intentions

ONDON - When Asia-Pacific Leaders gather in Scattle next week for their first summit, economic and trade issues will dominate the ada. But regional security issues should also command their attention.

At the top of the list of security concerns is North Korea's ouclear capability. Second is the widespread perception that the United States is drawing down its military presence in Asia and retreating into insolation, thus creating a power vacuum in the region. Finally, there is the question of China's military strength and future intentions.

China is a source of considerable anxiety to other Asian countries. In recent years its defense doctrine has shifted from interior defense to frontier defense, and now to long-distance projection of power.

Rapid reaction units are being developed by the People's Liberation Army. This is of particolar concern to neighboring states because China claims large tracts of the South and East China Seas, and is busy building infrastructure on islands that it occupies. Until its recent agreement with Vietnam to settle all such dis-putes peacefully. China appeared in no mood to compromise. There is still a big question mark about its future intentions.

Since 1988, the defense budget announced each year by the Chinese government has doubled in nominal terms. Yet for the first time in 150 years China faces no demonstrable threat to its national security.

Many credible sources estimate that China's actual defense outlays are at least double the official figure of $7.3 billion in 1993. China earned $2.5 billion from overseas arms sales in 1992; military-run enterprises earned another $5 billion.

Many defense-related costs are concealed in other categories of the national budget. For example, funding for the Commission on Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense, which coordinates research and development for weapons systems, is buried in the state science and technology budget.

Many troop maintenance costs are borne by provincial and civil affairs budgets. The People's Armed Police, the paramilitary arm of the PLA, is partly funded through the Ministry of State Security.

Various PLA construction projects are paid for by national and provincial construction budgets. And oo one knows where the funding for military intelligence and nuclear programs is buned. China announces an aggregate annual figure with no breakdown of spendiog categories.

With all this revenue, Beijing is buying weapons to support its new forward projection doctrioe. The Chinese navy gets a disproportionate By David Shambaugh share, but large amounts are being spent on the air force as well. Most worrying for neighbors are the weapons that the PLA is negotiatiog to buy from Russia, Ukraine and other states of the former Soviet Unioo. Those states desperately need hard currency and a range of imported goods that they bope to gain by selling arms.

Beijing is seeking some of the most sophisticated Soviet weapon systems, including Backfire supersonic strike bombers, long-range transports, air-borne warning and control planes, MiG-31 and Su-27 high altitude in-

China's military is unnecessarily secretive about its affairs. In Scattle, Presideot Bill Clinton and other Asia-Pacific leaders should raise these concerns with Jiang Zemin, the Chinese head of state who serves as chairman of the powerful Central Military Commission.

Chinese leaders bave repeatedly dismissed these concerns as paranoid propaganda allegedly put out by the United States in a search for a new "threat" to replace that of the Soviet Union. To be sure, substantial concern exists in the American government about China's military

But Beijing should realize that this apprehensioo exists as well in Japan, South Korea and throughout South and Southeast Asia. America is an easy target for the Chinese propaganda machine, but Beijing would do well to examine perceptions closer to home.

Hot Pace of Bond Issuance Looks Unlikely to Cool Off

By Carl Gewirtz nal Revold Tribung

ARIS - The "vigorous expansion" of activity seen so far this year on the international capital market seems unlikely to taper off in the months ahead, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development reports in its

The combination of falling long-term interest rates, large demand by sovereign borrowers and the heavy refinancing activities of corporate issuers already has catapulted new-issue moves to record levels and no letup is in sight. The refinancing needs alone during the first seven months of this time to come Overall, including bonds issued by foreign borrowers in domestic markets, $321 billion of new issues were floated during the first seven months, a year-over-year increase of 43 percent.

The stepped-up activity also is evident in the secondary market, where volume is running at a record level, too: $2.1 trillion in straight bonds traded during the first half of the year, a 10-percent rise over last year, and $2.79 billion in dollar-denominated floating rate notes, an increase of 50 percent. Backing this strong performance, the report notes, is an ample supply of funds ready to be invested. The report cites three factors exerting a positive influence on the supply of capital:

· Large institutional investors are taking a growing role, underpinning a broadly based process of asset diversification. "The flotation of very large, high-quality issues," it says, "has contributed to strengthen the liquidity of the Eurobond market and to widen further the scope for arbitrage opportunities and to improve com-

· Recent turmoil in the foreign-exchange market has failed to dent the demand for international securities. The report notes a resurgence of interest" in several market compartments that had suffered most from speculative attack in the currency market.

• The emergence of both new instruments — global-bonds and structured floating rate notes - and new markets, such as the Asiadollar market, "provide investors with additional international outlets for their investible funds and greater scope for an active policy of asset management."

Apart from the rising need to refinance maturing or existing debt, the surge in borrowing reflects the expanding appetite of governments to replenish foreign currency reserves and, in some cases, finance expanding budget deficits.

Latins Get Bulk Of Surge In Loans

PARIS-Led by a surge in bank lending to levels not seen since the outbreak of the Third World debt crisis a decade ago, total private financial flows to developing countries soared 51 percent last year, a new study shows. In contrast to the earlier global lending binge, the flow of funds now is concentrated in the more ad-vanced developing countries — nine in Asia and four in Latin America according to a report in the November edition of Financial Market Trends, published Monday by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. The Latin Americans were the main beneficiaries of such lending last year, when private flows donbled to $35 billion, the first substantial increase since the outbreak of the debt crisis.

The flows to Asia, which began rising in 1989, increased only $1 billion to $40 billion. But that makes the region still the largest recipient of such movements, and conditions remain favorable for attracting more funds, the study says.

Last year's total of $94 billion was up from $62.2 billion in 1991. Lending by banks more than tri-pled, to $37.7 billion from $11 biltion a year earlier. Two-thirds of this was short-term lending.
Almost $30 billion of the bank lending went to borrowers in the 13 countries cited in the study; all but $4.8 billion of that went to Asians. Borrowers in Indonesia account-ed for $5.6 billion of the bank loans, China for $4.9 billion, Thailand for $4.7 billion, South Korea for $3.2 billion and India for $2.5 billion. Residents in Hong Kong. Malaysia and Taiwan borrowed relatively small amounts, while those in Singapore reduced their foreign bank loans by $16 million.

But the Asians did less well in the international bond market. Total bond lending to all developing countries amounted to $13.4 billion, virtually unchanged from a year earlier. But an ever-larger share —63 percent; compared with 40 percent in 1991 — was taken by borrowers in Mexico, Brazil, Argentina and Venezuela. The study shows that portfolio investment flows also rose 36 percent last year to $9 billion. Although the bulk of this went to the 13 countries, the study says, there is no breakdown showing how much specific countries attracted.

Direct investment, for which there is also no breakdown, amounted to $28.8 billion, up 9 percent. Grants by nongovernmental agencies, also not broken down, were steady at $5.2 billion. Official lending and export credits to developing countries was unchanged at just over $71 billion.

The report highlights that private flows — including the return

Bonds Hit a Bumpy Road Pace of Growth Drives Inflation Fears

By Jonathan Fuerbringer New York Times Serner

NEW YORK — Burnpy might best sum up the road ahead for the bond market as traders and investors grapple with a series of discomforting economic reports and a quarterly auction at the For now, the market is not looking any further than the next data release and appears unable to take any bad news. Good news is being ignored. The mind-set seems to be that stronger growth will mean higher inflation, even if data on capacity utilization, productivity and price movements indicate otherwise.

The October employment report released Friday seemed to intensify the fear of growth. The increase of 177,000 nonfarm payroll jobs was a bule higher than the consensus, Manufacturing jobs, which rose by 12,000. increased for the first time since February, indicating that growth could be broadening beyond the service sector.

was the continued unwillingness of companies to hire new workers, as reflected in both the record high level of the average factory workweek in October and the fact that more than onethird of the new nonfarm jubs last month were temporary.

But many traders and investors cannot make such a bet, especially when they could lose much more than they could make.

Even the most optimistic forecasts for interest rates do not show the yield on the 30-year bond moving much below the 5.78 percent closing low on Oct. 15. The payoff from a drop of three-quarters of a percentage point is not much incentive when the market already has backed "The economy is not on fire," up the yield on the bond by more

In addition, it will be some time, perhaps into early next year. before it is clear if the economic forecasters are right that what might be 4 percent or more growth in the fourth quarter will slip to 3 percent or less in the first half of next year. A similar situation occurred at the end of 1992 and the beginning of this year.

"It is sensible for market participants to factor in that this time it may not be a false alarm." said John R. Williams, managing director of global market eco-nomics at the Bankers Trust Co. "I would freely admit that it remains to be seen."

That means interest rates ought to remain volatile and there is a chance that the yield on the 30-year bond will jump above 6.25 percent On Friday, the 30-year bond yield hit 6.25 percent twice in volatile tracing after the employment report, But the price recovered well, with the yield ending at 6.20 percent up from 6.17 percent Thursday. At the same time, short-term interest rates could also be moving higher because of fear that Federal Reserve will move quickly to raise its target for the rates if the pace of the fourth

Beijing to Press For Low Tariffs On Pacific Rim

BELIING - China said Sunday it would use an Asia-Pacific economic summit meeting this month in promote its ideal of unconditional most-favored-nation tariff status among all countries on the Pacific Rim.

The push for mutual most-favored-nation status, with its spirit of free trade, is also likely to be a central strategy in Beijing's hid to counter calls in the United States to strip China of its hilateral trade privileges because of a human rights dispute.

Beijing has declined to comment on reports that it would submit a formal proposal to set up a lowtariff system among Pacific Rim nations at the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation meeting that starts on Nov. 17 in Seattle.

But an official at the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation was quoted in the China Daily on Sunday as saying that Beijing would use the APEC meeting to push the low-tariff ideal. saying it was in line with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. APEC groups 15 Asian and Pacific Rim countries, including China and the United States.

Long Yongiu, director-general for international affairs at the Trade Ministry, was quoted as saying that APEC "should especially honor the GATT principles on extending most-favored-nation status unconditionally among all its members.

Such low-tariff privileges should be the cornerstone of the APEC objectives." he said. China Daily said Mr. Long's comments "sent a clear message that the granting of unconditional MFN is one principle China will uphold in APEC." The proposed policy has implications for U.S.-China relations. which have been troubled by friction over charges of Chinese human rights abuses, protectionism and arms proliferation. It also comes at a time when

China's trade surplus with the United States, souring toward $23 billion this year, appears likely to rekindle U.S. anger over harriers to China's markets, The U.S. secretary of state. Warren M. Christopher, warned again last week that China was risked losing its most-favored-nation trade benefits next year.

"MFN is specifically conditioned on improvement in human rights," Mr. Christopher said, "But we'll also have to weigh the other aspect of our relationship: nonproliferation and trade."

The biggest success to date has been Les Prits Incollables, an illustrated flash-card series launched in 1990 and still selling at the rate of 650,000 copies a year in France. An American version called Brain Quest, li-censed to the New York trade publisher Workman Publishing Co., bas already sold over 4.2 million copies in the United States since its launch 16 months ago. Brain Quest is very well packaged and it challenges the mind with brainteasers. The kids obviously like it because they're becoming repeat customers."

Brain Quest, with editions corresponding to curricula for each class from preschool to junior high school, also is getting a strong boost from teachers, Ms. Roback said, ex-plaining that educators are seeking nontradi-tional tools for the classroom. A growing number of teachers are agreeing to participate in championships which are being organized by Workman. In France, Mr. Saltet said the company vanted to sell its product to the French nation al education system, but soon realized the step was not necessary. "Why fight to get in the front door, when we could go easily through the back door," he said. "The reachers are buying it and offering it as a reward to their students for finishing their work quickly."

The company got its start in 1985 when the three, then in their mid-20s, decided to hop a train for a weekend getaway to northern France. "We got on the train in Paris and came up with the idea for a game based on the bac," be said, referring to the baccalaureat. required for university entrance. "By the time we arrived two and a half hours later, we had finished the idea and decided to start a business together." Sworn to secrecy, the three decided to continue at their regular jobs and meet in their spare time to develop the product. At first, they met every Thursday evening, then twice a week, and then every night. Then, following the plan, Mr. Dufour quit his joh to work on the concept full time, while being supported by the salaries of his two friends. Then Mr. Burrus quit, as Mr. Saltet supported them both.

The company bas made a profit every year hut one — in 1989, when they were between new products — and most of these profits have been reinvested in new business activities. Play Bac expects a pretax profit of 1 million francs this year. In addition to the children's newspaper project, the company has just sold an idea to the U.S. publisher Random House for a series of discovery activities for small children modeled on those found in American children's museums. Adding the $35 billion raised this year by international organizations, the study says that the "stag-gering total" of $110 billion, accounting for over one-third of total offerings is due to official borrowers. In the year-ago period, this group raised only $61.6 billion.

The other major source of capital demand comes from banks, which so far this year raised $70 billion in

Much of this borrowing has been concentrated in the floating-rate note sector, where volume is up 48 percent from the year-ago period and is running close to the record level set nearly a decade ago.

Borrowers in developing countries raised $21 billion in the bond market in the first seven months, with Latin Americans accounting for $13.5 billion.

Supported by the good performance of all major stock markets, placements of international equities have been running at a record pace," the study notes, with volume of $20.5 billion in the first seven months, almost 6 percent higher

There also has been a "remarkable expansion" of medium-term note programs ($62 billion, up 13 percent year-on-year) as well as a "rebound" in the establishment of Euro-commercial paper programs ($23 billion, up 76 percent).

On Friday, administration officials applauded the stronger growth foreshadowed in the employment report. One of the president's chief campaign promises was to create jobs. But even that cheerleading may worry traders and investors, and interest rates might be pushed higher. One of the few accomplishments the new administration has been able to brag about was the sharp decline in long-term interest rates, to 25-year lows.

· After years of contraction, "banks are now in a position to expand again their activity in developing countries." Loans to such countries now represent only 8.8 percent of the external assets of Western banks, down from almost 19 percent a decade ago.

THE NEW 900. VERY STRONG. VERY SAFE. VERY SAAB.

At Saab, safety means more than meeting legal requirements. It is a passion. A total commitment to safety for all passengers. Safety for the whole family.

That's why we've developed Saab Safeseat - a unique combination of protection and practicality in the rear seat.

From the pivoting transverse beam that supports three 3-point seatbelts, to multiple elements that protect against side collision intrusion, to dual integrated child booster cushions.

But the safety commitment doesn't end here. In the front, a driver's airbag is standard while the roof structure exceeds the European class average and nearly twice the U.S. legal safety requirement.

Energy absorbing crumple zones front and rear, and a rigid safety cage that includes a patented design to protect against offset frontal collisions, the new Saab 900 epitomizes our safety commitment.

THE NEW SAAB 900. VERY SAAB.

SYDNEY - The largest U.S. public pension fund threatened Sunday to dump a major share-holding in News Corp. if the media giant went ahead with its plan to issue "super" shares.

Richard Koppers, chief counsel of the California Public Employees Retirement System, known as Calpers, said the fund had planned to increase its investment in Australian companies, including News Corp., but strongly opposed the su-

Brazil Slips as Its Elite Grows Rich

By Don Podesta

Washington Past Service
BRASILIA — Wracked by four-digit inflation and apparently endemic political cor-ruption, Latin America's largest country seems afflicted with a peculiar paradox: The more the country lags behind the moderniza-tion and reform sweeping much of the rest of the region, the more its elite insist that there is no cause for Brazil to change.

Brazil's unemployment is high and rising.

Its underclass numbers in the tens of millions. The government's plan to combat this is nowhere to be seen. Last year, the economies of Chile and Argentina and Venezuela were growing at 9 percent or more. Brazil's shrank 1 percent, though it has returned to growth this year, Now -- less than a year after Congress, to much acclaim, ousted President Fernando Collor de Mello for corruption — another financial scandal has erupted. The Congress finds itself mired in controversy over the diversion of millions of dollars from the federal budget for the personal use of about two dozen congressmen, governors and federal officials.

The former federal budget director, José Carlos Alves dos Santos, accused more than two dozen congressmen, senators, governors and other officials of diverting millions from the federal budget for themselves.

Mr. Alves dos Santos made his charges after having been arrested when an enormous amount of cash was found hidden under his mattress. The discovery came during an investigation of the suspected murder of his missing wife. Among those be accused of corruption were Mr. Franco's chief of staff, Henrique Hargreaves, and Regional Integra-tioo Minister Alexandre Costa.

est advisers, refused to step down for days after the scandal broke, and Mr. Franco, after the scandal broke, and Mr. Franco, reluctant to fire him, was reported by local media to be deeply depressed. Mr. Hargeaves tendered his resignation Friday.

Despite such problems, many Brazilians feel their country works just fine.

What's happening? The battle against what could soon be hyperinflation provides an example of why politicians and the business

Wages in Brazil are indexed to inflation and adjusted every four months. However, infla-tion is rising by more than 1 percent a day, so by the end of the 120-day period, salaries are worth about one-third of what they were. While this is disastrous to the wage earner, it is a big break for employers, and there is no bigger employer than the government.

Inflation deflates payrolls as a cost of production, so manufacturers get a bonus, said Richard Foster, editor of the newsletter Brazil Watch, which focuses on the economy. "They never have to worry about labor costs." Other winners include those who move cash into high-interest-bearing money market accounts, which generally stay ahead of inflation. Banks make out nicely, too. The government's attack on inflation has been timid. President Itamar Franco and his finance ministers - there have been five in the 10 months since Mr. Collor was impeached - have made clear that the shock treatments of the Collor government and his predecessor, Jose Sarney, are not for them. Besides, officials point out, after a grim 1992, the economy is back on the plus side, projected to grow about 5 percent this year.

"We are oot going to do a quick fix and freeze prices, which we have done three or four times before with oo success," said Winston Fritsch, the Finance Ministry's economic policy security. Instead, the administry of the price of the security instead the administry. ic policy secretary. be said, the government will stop indexing wages and social security payments.
But Mr. Franco's government is running out of time. "Putting the house in order before attacking inflation has already failed," said Emir Sader, a political scientist at the University of São Paulo. "Because putting the house in order is a task without end."

Congress has begun a revision of the constitution, seen by many as a leading cause of the government's financial difficulties. It forbids state workers to be fired, so reducing payrolls

The Associated Press OKLAHOMA CITY — The long-shot winner in the Breeders' Cup Clas-sic led to two $1.5 milbin payonts in the national Pick Seven. Keith Chamblin, spokesman for Remington Park, said the ticket sold in Oklahoma City was worth $1,499,916.20, while the ticket sold at Santa Anita was worth $1,598,310. The difference in payoffs was because of different state taxes.

Arcangues was fourth in his last race. at Longchamp, and sixth in England the race before that. He began the year in May at Longchamp with a seventhplace finish, and won a Group I race

Bowe Dethroned by Holyfield

By William Gildea

Vashington Post Service LAS VEGAS - Evander Holyfield, defying history and the odds, handed Riddick Bowe his first loss Sunday morning and regained the heavyweight title with a majority

The fight, in Caesars Palace's outdoor stadium, was interrupted for 21 minutes in the seventh round when a parachutist landed on the ropes, creating havoc among the tightly packed customers at ringside.

Bul after the ridiculous came more of the sublime as Holyfield, the 31-year-old underdog, won back the World Boxing Association and International Boxing Federation crowns with an adroit combi-nation of boxing and slugging that caught the sluggish. 26-year-old Bowe by surprise.

Holyfield's victory sets up a possible unification bout with the World Boxing Council champion. Lennox Lewis, who watched the fight on TV from London. I want to thank God," said Holyfield, after he was pulled from the fray by his trainer, Emanuel Steward, when the two fighters continued hammering each other after the final

"He deserved it," Bowe said, "I'll be back. The guy who came out of the sky frightened my wife somewhat so I can't stay long. When Holyfield comes in tell him I congratulate

For once, Holyfield, who now has a 30-I record, gained the respect that has eluded him while Bowe, 34-I, appeared sheepish when be said, "I'd like to do it again."

"He came for it." added Bowe, giving credit to Holyfield's brilliantly executed plan and his remarkable courage. Holyfield weighed 217 pounds (98.4 kilograms) to Bowe's 246, yet repeatedly landed the more telling blows.

"If I fight again, ves, I will give him a rematch," said Holyfield.

Judge Jerry Roth scored the bout 115-113 and Patricia Jarman scored it 115-114, Holyfield; Chuck Giampa cailed it a draw, 114-114. "I promised to win this fight," Holyfield said.

"I prepared myself for the best Bowe possible. I went for a knockout the last time. This time I knew I didn't have to knock him out. My plan was this: Fight sometimes, box sometimes, I stuck to the game plan," Holyfield, quicker than Bowe with his punches, said he noticed early he could outjab Bowe even though Bowe had a 4%-inch (11.5centimeter) reach advantage.

He was so focused, Hotyfield said, that he maintained concentration during the long interruption caused by the parachutist. "I just wanted to correct my mistakes against Bowe," he said, "and I thank God for that opportunity to do it."

Holyfield became only the third heavyweight to win back his title in a rematch. In nine earlier instances, only Muhammad Ali and Floyd Pat-terson had succeeded.

Bowe appeared to make a bad miscalculation early, just as Holyfield bad done in their first fight last November. Bowe came out headhunting, trying for an early knockout, abandoned all the advantages of size and reach while Holyfield got off his punches much more quickly, then just as quickly retreated out of

The fight was still close when Holyfield poured it on Bowe in the 10th round. He backed Bowe up with jabs and combinations and got the crowd cheering him on. In close, Holyfield scored clean shots to the head, ham mered Bowe with a right with 30 seconds left in the round and finished up by knocking Bowe's mouthpiece out in the last seconds.

Holyfield showed signs of tiring early in the 11th, and tried to tie up Bowe. He managed to take a minute off the clock, then struck in the late going catching Bowe off guard as the champion lunged forward. Holyfield landed a big right with 25 seconds left in the round.

The 12th round was similar to the first in one respect: Bowe went looking for a knockout. This time, Holyfield didn't dance at all but slugged with the bigger man. Both landed hard rights in the final minute, and both swung at one another after the bell.

Bowe had landed a big right hand on Holyfield's chin seconds after the opening bell, knocking the challenger off balance. Both landed combinations at mid-round, and both scored with their jabs late in the round. By Round 2 it was clear that Bowe was looking hard for a knockout. Holyfield was there for him to hit, but late in this round Bowe missed with two big right hands. Still, Bowe took advantage of his reach to pepper Holyfield Bowe complained twice that Holyfield was butting him, and Holyfield pressed the attack in Round 3. He scored with a left uppercut and a sneaky right. But Bowe continued to score repeatedly with jabs and landed a heavy right uppercut near the bell.

The fourth round proved a classic brawl, with Bowe landing lefts and rights almost at will early in the round but with Holyfield coming back strong, working inside and scoring his hooks and rights.

A flush right hand by Holyfield spurred Bowe to action in the round's final seconds, and the two battled furiously after the bell as the crowd stood and roared. Bowe suffered a nick near his left eye in the fourth, and Holyfield redoubled his efforts in the fifth. He got to the mark quicker than Bowe, landed jabs repeatedly and smartly stayed on the outside. And when he came in, he got much the better of it with the slower champion. In the final seconds Holyfield landed a right that almost had Bowe out on his feet. Bowe regained his bearings in Round 6, jabbing more. But Holyfield peopered Bowe's left sye, which continued to close to little more than a slit. Then in the seventh round came the fight interruption to end all fight interruptions.

In one of the most bizarre scenes at any major sports event, the parachutist dropped from the sky and landed upside down on the top rope of the ring, his legs entangled in the rope. Referee Mills Lane immediately called time, as security guards rushed in.

With action halted on a cool night, both fighters returned to their stools and Bowe was wrapped in a blanket, Holyfield in his gold robe with his head covered with towels. During the delay. Bowe's eye improved until it appeared that he could see clearly once again.

Holyfield, however, simply proved too cagey, showing too much improvement over the past year for Bowe. Holyfield displayed ever-in-creasing ring savvy while Bowe looked lethargie

But befitting a sport that often verges toward the insane, as the heavyweight title changed hands the most memorable instant came from a prank that delayed the seventh round for 21 minutes. A skydiver, identified as James Miller from Las Vegas, circled the Caesars Palace outdoor pavilion, then parachuted directly into the ring ropes near Bowe's corner. He was briefly beaten by spectators, then removed in handcuffs on a stretcher.

"It was a major league unfortunate incident," said Bowe's manager, Rock Newman. Bowe's pregnant wife, Judith, who was sitting near where the parachunst crashed back into the crowd, fainted and was taken to Sunrise Hospital for observation. The parachutist was taken to Both Futch and Judy Bowe were released Sun-day, Miller who had been released from University Medical Center into police custody the night before, was released from jail Sunday on $200 bond. "I saw that parachute guy coming in, I didn't know what was happening and I was trying to get away," Holyfield said. "I did think about that tennis lady [Monica Seles] being stabbed I didn't know who was he coming after, me or Bowe? And i didn't want to get hit, either."

Said a Caesars official: "I'm sure there's a law against flying into a boxing ring with a parachute."

During the delay, both fighters prowled the ring and tried to keep warm in the chilly night breeze. Bowe wrapped himself in towels and Hotyfield mostly stared out into the area of the crash, shaking his head back and forth. (LAT, AP, Reuters)

Ivanisevic Deals the Aces, Medvedev Folds in Final

By Ian Thomsen

International Herald Tribuni PARIS - Goran Ivanisevic beat four top 10 players in four days here, and now he is in the top 10 himself. It is where he belongs.

"I am really playing my best ten-nis now," he said after his 6-4, 6-2. 7-6 (7-2) victory over No. 6 Andrei Medvedev in Sunday's final of the $2,165 million Paris Open, "Mentally, I'm much stronger. I'm really strong mentally, I don't know why - it's just coming."

Bankruptcy Won't Hurt Team

NEW YORK (NYT) - The New York Yankees will apparently not be affected by the bankruptcy of George Steinbrenner's American Ship Building Co., according to Bud Selig, baseball's acting commissioner.

"I don't believe there's any financial or other relationship between American Ship and the Yankees," Selig said.
"From George's standpoint, as I understand it, it's an insignificant amount of his net worth today."

Current and former limited partners of the Yankees said they were not aware of any financial link between Steinbrenner's two interests. The Associated Press said it erroneously reported that baseball officials had said the company had borrowed heavily from the Yankees in recent years.

Gallacher Due to Get Cup Nod

SOTOGRANDE, Spain (Renters) — Bernard Gallacher is expected to be named before the end of the year to continue as captain of the European Ryder Cup golf team for the next match, in 1995. Ken Schofield, the executive director of the European Tour, said the decision on the captaincy would be annonneed after a meeting of the Ryder Cup committee later this month. "The players all want him to continue, I think, and I believe all the Tour staff do as well," he said.

Gallacher, whose teams were defeated in 1991 and again this year, is believed to have reconsidered his earlier decision to leave the position. The 1995 match against the Americans will be held at the Oak Hill course in Rochester, New York.

For the Record

Bo Jackson has been paid a $150,000 termination fee by the Chicago White Sox, making him eligible to become a free agent. The club decided not to pick up the designated hitter's option year of $2.41 million. The outfielder Vince Coleman has pleaded guilty in Los Angeles to a misdemeanor charge of possessing an explosive device. Coleman, who admitted throwing a powerful fire-cracker near a group of fans outside Dodger Stadium on July 24, had faced a felony charge, but the count was reduced through a plea agreement. A one-year prison term was suspended and Coleman, 32, was ordered to perform 200 hours of community service. He was also fined $1,000. He began his community service immediately, helping to clean up wildfire damage in nearby Malibu. (AP)

Hold On to Your Security Blanket

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — New Dealers, back in the '30s, had a lock on the word security. If any phrase exemplified the yearning of the nation in that Depression era, it was Social Security.

On the international scene, liberals, who were then interventionist, touted Wilsonian collective security; In another sense of the word, the Securities and Exchange Commission was formed to guard against the predators of Wall Street.

At the end of that decade, the conservatives began taking the word back. Internal security became the phrase to define the defense against Communist penetration.

In the Eisenhower years, national security became of great concern, and the president was given a national security adviser who had a whole council to go with him. For a long generation, security connoted national defense and was a hot-hutton word for

The left is now taking the word back. Israel's Labor prime minister, Vitzhak Rabin, in the light of widespread worry about the knife attacks of the imifada, began balancing national security with a need for personal security.

It was a way to lay the groundwork for an accom-modation with local Palestinians and ultimately with

United States, too, its use at first dominated by lawand-order advocates who wanted a crackdown on criminals threatening people on the streets. Of late, however — and from the bully pulpit of the White House — the term has been broadened and appropriated hy liberals.

The press secretary, Dee Dee Myers (whose first name is Margaret, but the White House is an informal place these days), responded to a question about President Chinton's broadened use of personal securi-

"I think this is an outgrowth of earlier speeches where the president talked about personal security," she said, "whether it's health security or freedom from fear of crime or knowing that you have a good job in an economy that's working."

Thus, Clinton is using personal security as an umbrella term for confidence in police protection, for the end of worry about medical costs to hring what's called health security (complete with a health security card), and for the economic optimism long known as financial security.

"If F.D.R. did his Four Freedoms speech today, wonders Daniel Schorr, senior correspondent of Na-tional Public Radio, who called this phenomenon to my attention, "would it be 'Four Securities'?"

This retaking of security did not happen by accident; a shrewdly manipulative hand is at work here. It's making right-wingers insecure,

O. K., you health-care-reform advocates, are you for preventative medicine or preventive medicine? Cyril Mazansky, M. D., chairman of the strategic planning committee of Carney Hospital in Boston, wants to know: "As we train our future primary care physicians to concentrate on preventive ("preventative) during their afternoon off, take their car into the dealer for preventive (preventive) maintenance?"

Although a tad upfrom with his question marks for my taste, Dr. Mazansky poses a question that embarrasses usagists, who are all over the lot on this one. When everything is correct, nobody's Here's my suggestion: use preventive as an adjec-tive and preventative as a noun. Thus, as you practice presentite medicine and give your car presentive mainnance, you take a flu shot in your arm - and slap a coat of wax on your car - as a preventative.

I know I'm being prescriptive, but it's better than being prescriptative.

Frank Gifford, the preeminent (better hyphenate pre-eminent; otherwise, it looks as if it sounds like a combination of preeming and permanent) U. S. sportscaster, has a new book out titled "The Whole Ten Yards," written with Harry Waters. Frank's an old buddy and his book is a hoot (the latest sense of hoot is defined as "something or someone amusing" in the up-to-the-minute Merriam-Webster's 10th Collegiate), but I hasten to warn readers that the title, while memorable, may contribute to a widespread misapprehension.

The whole nine vards, the expression on which the former football star's eatchy book title is based, has nothing to do with football.

One school of etymological thought on this is nautical, where a vand is a long spar to support and spread the head of a square sail. (The vandarm is the end of that spar, and you are not supposed to booze it up until the sun sinks below it in tate afternoon.)

Each mast of a three-masted, square-rigged sailing ship carried three yards; when the sails were fully spread, or "under full canvas," the ship had the propulsion of winds caught by the whole nine sards. That's all you know, sneer the drivers of concrete trucks (and you'd better not call them cement trucks unless you want truckloads of mail poured, lava-like, over your head). Construction workers insist, and I agree with them, that the phrase comes from the cubic contents of the large, revolving cylinder that mixes cement and sand to make concrete. A job that requires a full truckload calls for the whole nine rards. People who know standard measurements say that cubic contents are measured in eet, not yards; but go tell that to the guy in the truck — he il pour a small load all over your feet. You will even find seamstresses to say that nine yards used to be the length of a boit of cloth, and that some fancy dresses took up the whole nine yards, but that's as far out as the folk etymology suggesting it means nine-tenths of the way to a first down.
